

I listen to K-LOVE on FM station 88.5 in my town of North Pole, Alaska nearly every day. It fills a role that no other station in this area does. If K-LOVE were forced off the air by the expansion of LPFM, it would leave a large gap in the diversity of radio listening options in this area, which is remote enough that choices are already limited. This would be a disservice to the general public in this area of Alaska, limiting our choice of radio stations to choose from. Thank you for your consideration my input.
